STORNOWAY

A guide to the only town in the Outer Hebrides

2024/25

Lews Castle

FÀILTE

Stornoway, or in Gaelic Steòrnabhagh, is the only town in the Outer Hebrides (also known as the Western Isles), it lies 44 miles off the coast of the Scottish mainland and just eight degrees south of the Arctic Circle. It is a small town of around 8,000 people, dating back to the arrival of the Vikings 1,500 years ago; although the first human settlement in the islands is thought to date back to the end of the last ice age, approximately 10,000 years ago.

The name Stornoway derives from Old Norse and has been variously translated as 'a place of clean water', and/or, 'a safe anchorage'.

For a small town it is a busy and bustling place, serving the villages and townships scattered around the coastline of Lewis and Harris.

Overlooking the town is Lews Castle. Building began in 1847 from a design by a Glasgow architect, it was to become the home of Sir James and Lady Matheson. With his business partner, William Jardine, Matheson became a highly successful businessman and Victorian entrepreneur who made a fortune buying opium in India and selling it to the Chinese through the port of Hong Kong. While Matheson remains a controversial figure, the Jardine Matheson company still trades in Hong Kong today and the castle he constructed in Stornoway is now open to the public and houses the town's museum which is well worth a visit.

The land surrounding the castle is known locally as the Castle Grounds and offers delightful woodland walks along its many paths. The Castle Grounds are managed by The Stornoway Trust, the longest-standing community land trust in Scotland. The Trust have maintained stewardship of the 69,000-acre estate since the gifting of the town and its environs to the community in 1923 by Lord Leverhulme.

Leverhulme, credited with building the first multinational company Lever Brothers, owned Lewis and Harris and Lews Castle, in the early part of the 20th century. The entrepreneur had an ambitious, industrial vision for Stornoway and the islands and although some of his plans were enacted with success, clashes with the local community ultimately led to the abandonment of his grandest plans.

From the middle of the 19th century, up until the beginning of WW2 in 1939, Stornoway was the centre of a thriving herring fishing industry and much of the town's prosperity came from the 'silver darlings'. Two bronze statues in the town, one on South Beach near the bus station, and the other on North Beach close to the inner harbour, show a Stornoway herring girl clothed in a traditional Scottish jersey, cloth cap and heavy leather apron. These girls were reputed to gut one herring every second and had to fill between 40 and 50 barrels of salted herring in order to make any money from their labours. It was a hard life.

Today a walk around the outer and inner harbour highlights the bustling maritime life of the town including the fishing fleet, leisure yachts, cruise vessels, cargo ships and the daily lifeline ferry service to Ullapool. Stornoway as a port has continually defined island life from its historic importance as a commercial stop on North Atlantic shipping routes to its significance as a main departure and arrival point. Mass emigration in the 1920s saw a generation of islanders leave on ships such as the SS Metagama, in hope of better opportunities in the US, Canada and beyond; one such emigrant was a young

Mary Anne MacLeod, later Mary Anne Trump, whose son Donald would go on to become the 45th President of the United States.

Across the road from the outer harbour, on South Beach Street, lies the imposing Stornoway Town Hall, a two-storey building with a clock tower that was rebuilt in 1929 after a disastrous fire in 1918. It now houses the Stornoway Historical Society on the ground floor, and the offices of the Harris Tweed Authority, including the Harris Tweed Story Room, on the first floor.

Harris Tweed is the only textile in the world protected by an Act of Parliament. It defines Harris Tweed as: 'Handwoven, by the islanders at their homes in the Outer Hebrides, finished in the Outer Hebrides, and made from pure virgin wool dyed and spun in the Outer Hebrides.'

The Harris Tweed Authority promotes and maintains the authenticity, standard and reputation of the cloth, as well as stamping it with the famous orb trademark, one of the oldest marks in the UK. Throughout the town you will find retail outlets selling Harris Tweed items made by local weavers and finished at the three Harris Tweed mills in Lewis.

Another unique local product the town is famous for is Stornoway

Charles MacLeod
Stornoway Black Pudding

Black Pudding, a food delicacy which holds valued Protected Geographical Status. Just three butchers in the town, W J MacDonald, Charles MacLeod, and MacLeod & MacLeod have the coveted accolade of producing genuine Stornoway Black Pudding, or in Gaelic, Marag Dubh; local connoisseurs claim to be able to detect the critical differences in each butcher's Black Pudding recipes.

Stornoway has a number of cafés and restaurants where local produce can be tasted alongside a variety of international cuisine all of which contributes to a thriving cosmopolitan feel. Pakistani and Italian communities have lived in the town since the end of WW2 and now are joined by newer arrivals from countries such as Syria, Afghanistan, Ukraine and Somalia. The primary school in Stornoway has children from families from all over the world and alongside Gaelic, over 20 different first-languages can be heard, from Arabic to Yoruba. The Stornoway Mosque in James Street, opened in 2019, serves a Muslim community of about 60 people in the town.

There are a number of Christian churches throughout the town, charting the strong faith and various denominations within the local community. On the corner of Kenneth Street and Francis Street stands the imposing Martin's Memorial Church which was built on the site of the birthplace of Canadian explorer, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, 'the first white man to cross the Canadian Continent from east to west'. The main church building was completed in 1878 with the impressive spire which dominates the town skyline added in 1911.

Directly across from Martin's Memorial Church you will find An Lanntair Arts Centre which acts as a cultural hub for the island's thriving arts scene, offering exhibitions and events throughout the year. At weekends Stornoway has a bustling nightlife with many pubs hosting live music.

Just off Point Street, opposite the Criterion Bar – known locally in the town as the Crit – lies Carn Gardens. Back in the 18th century, a house here was the birthplace of Colin Mackenzie who worked for the East India Company and became India's first Surveyor General. He died in Calcutta in 1821 and is interred under a fine colonnaded mausoleum in the city's South Park Street Cemetery.

In Carn Gardens today there is a wooden statue of a young woman with a creel of peats on her back, testament to the tradition of peat cutting that is still maintained throughout the islands, as well as a memorial to mark the centenary of the loss of the HMY Iolaire. Erected by students at The Nicolson Institute, the town's secondary school, the memorial pays tribute to the 201 men, returning home from service during WW1 who lost their lives when the vessel struck rocks and sank near the entrance to Stornoway Harbour in the small hours of New Year's Day 1919.

The Shèol an Iolaire installation along South Beach harbour also commemorates the loss, showing the true size of the vessel and representing the number of crew and passengers on board as she sailed for Stornoway. The tragedy of that night still haunts the islands today.

Where Cromwell Street and 'The Narrows' meet North Beach Street is a steel sculpture bearing a line by the renowned Gaelic poet, Derick Thompson who hailed from Lewis:

'A' leth – aithneachadh gach duine air a chuideachd, aithne gun chuimhne, is cuimhne gun aithne.'

This broadly translates as:
'The recognition of a person by the company they keep or family resemblance – a knowledge of them, without knowing them, they strike a chord in our memory.'

The quote acknowledges the inter-woven relationship of generations of community found in the islands and is just one of the many examples of Gaelic you
